I Wish They Would Have Signed My Book

Bill's mom and sister were in Vermont visiting his sister that lives up there. Somewhere up there, they saw the mother and daughter selling "The Sound of Music" books. This book and the movie it was made into were based on a true story. Ann bought one of the books and they asked her if she wanted them to sign it. She said no because she didn't understand what they had said.

When she got back home, she said, "I wish they would have signed my book."

Peggy said, "Well, they asked you and you said no."

Ann said, "Peggy! You mean you stood right there and let them not sign my book?"

Peggy laughed and said, "Well, I thought you knew what they were saying."

Ann said, "Well, I didn't."

The Von Trapp family settled in Vermont after they were forced to leave their other home. They thought Vermont looked a lot like the place that they had to leave. Later on, their house in Vermont burned down. Their mother didn't live long after the house burned. I saw the movie and thought it was great.

The Beautiful Little Goat

A man went to the stock sale and saw a beautiful little goat. He bought it, and put it inside his car. While he was looking at other things for sale, the little goat got hungry and ate all the upholstery off the inside of the car.
